

New Year Reception to Be Revived at the White House

Mrs. Harding Announces Dates for Official Entertainments
This Season.

Special Despatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD.
Washington, D. C., Oct. 1. — The New Year Day reception at the White House will be revived this year. This is, perhaps, the most striking feature of the announcement given out by Mrs. Harding today, the date selected for official entertainments at the Executive Mansion.

With the issuing of this calendar the first gun of the season of 1921-1922 may be said to have been fired. Hostesses may now proceed with their arrangements for entertainments without running the risk of having their invitations conflict with those from the White House.

As New Year's Day falls on Sunday, the reception at the White House will be held on Monday, January 2. One of the most picturesque and characteristically American hospitality ever held at the White House, its passing at the beginning of the Wilson Administration caused widespread regret. And it is expected that its resumption will be followed by a revival of the official entertaining, which went far to make New Year's Day in Washington notably brilliant.

With this exception all the White House entertainments so far announced will take place on Thursday. The Cabinet dinner, the first of the "State" luncheon, is set for Thursday, December 15. The diplomatic dinner will be on Thursday, January 14; the dinner to the Supreme Court on February 2, and the dinner to the Speaker on February 16.

The first State reception will be the diplomatic reception on January 12. It will be followed on January 26 by the Judicial reception. The Congressional reception will be held on February 3 and the Army and Navy reception on February 23. With the exception of the diplomatic reception, to which color is added by the uniforms of the members of the corps, this is the most picturesque of all the four receptions and it is perhaps the most enjoyable.

HUNGARIAN PIANIST
OPENS CONCERT SEASON

Ervin Nyiregyhazi Plays at Carnegie Hall.

The way of the youthful piano virtuoso, who has not discovered why he is not entirely satisfactory to public taste, is difficult. One may consider the case of young Ervin Nyiregyhazi, Hungarian pianist, who opened the recital season in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. He made his debut last October since when his locks have become shorter and his name longer. And a subtle change has come over his playing.

When he first appeared he astonished and sometimes disconcerted his hearers by enormous force, dazzling agility of finger, and erratic treatment of melodic lines. The brilliancy and force are still his, but it was evident yesterday that he was striving to proceed with caution. The result was not always happy. In Chopin's nocturne in E major, for instance, it seemed inconceivable that night was the time for sleep.

But without attempting to examine the pianist's performance in detail it may be said of him again that he is the possessor of a genuine, but still unformed talent. The youth has not yet found himself. Whether he will develop into a mastery interpreter of piano music cannot be determined now. He has few years and many fingers. Both are good things to have. He was heard by an audience which apparently approved of everything he did, no matter how he did it.
